

THE DOWN OF DEMOCRACY

A dystopian street scene with silhouetted figures and glowing signs. The scene is set in a dark, rainy street with wet pavement reflecting the ambient light. Several figures in dark, hooded clothing are walking away from the viewer. The buildings are multi-story and feature large, glowing yellow signs with Cyrillic text. The overall atmosphere is somber and oppressive.

MARTIN Noé

Libertalia, 2037

In the ruins of Libertalia, an anarchistic dystopian city, survival is a daily challenge as citizens scavenge for scarce resources among the debris. Ruled by a collective of inspiring yet ruthless anarchists, the city is a hotbed of rebellion and resistance.

In the middle of the city's debris a powerful group of anarchists started gathering troops in order to take over the whole country of Ardentia of which Libertalia used to be the capital city and eventually spread their ideology around the globe.

In the other countries that are not impacted by the rise of this new ideology the influential individuals start being concerned of what could happen to them.

The commoners of the other countries still ignored all of what was going on in the capital of Ardentia, the politicians afraid of seeing the anarchist ideology spread in their country through the news regulated the informations to avoid any leak of the current situation in Libertalia.

But that did not stop the anarchy to spread out in Ardentia, the people of this former powerful country started to try and leave their place for safer ones, some got stuck at the borders but some others went through it by some ways.

Rumors of what's happening in Ardentia starting spreading in the neighbouring countries as more and more people flee away to a safer place, even if it was still only a gossip because of the lack of information in the news a feeling of some kind of fear was progressly growing as some groups were inspired by the ideas spreaded in the stories of what's happening in Ardentia and moreover Libertalia.

In answer to this situation the heads of the different governments of this world gathered in order to find a way to protect their democracies.

They agreed on raising an army together in order to defeat the troops of the anarchists that were on their way to the democracies' lands with one goal in mind, spread chaos.

But it was already too late, as the same time as they were meeting the army led by the anarchist made their way through the border of the surrounding countries and started devastating the surrounding and spreading their ideology, which made their army grow more and more.

In the end all that was left behind the path of the anarchists was chaos and misery, making everyone's life condition worst than ever. And this movement that emerged from poverty, insecurity and carelessness from the governments only brang their problem to the rest of the population.

CREDITS:

Story and project created
by MARTIN Noé,
student of Terminal
Général at the Lycée de l'Europe, in Dunkirk.

Initiative of the teacher of SVT Mr Blasselle.

Images generated by the AI dream.ai by wombo